
The Best Medicine

The Panic Room

Mrs. Malloy, an elderly English patient, popped into my office one day after seeing a dermatologist for a nagging rash that just would not go away.

“So, how did it go with the specialist?” I inquired pleasantly.

“Well,” Dora replied, “He said I have panniculitis.”

“I see. And did he prescribe anything for you?”

Dora shot me a wicked smile. “He did, but I think the best treatment for something called panniculitis would be not to PANIC!” ☒

This item was sent in by Dr. Dan Ezekiel, Vancouver, British Columbia.

“He’d like a vasectomy, wouldn’t you, Arnold?”

Have you ever been in a funny medical-related situation that you’d like to share with your peers? Send us your 150- to 200-word contribution so we can share your laughs. Published authors will receive a specialty mug from The Canadian Journal of Diagnosis